

This week we were coming off of Thanksgiving Break so in our meeting we had to remember the events from a week prior. The week off allowed many of us to reflect from a fresh perspective. It also boosted our energy heading forward. Suffice to say we are ready to meet the goals we set for this third sprint. Furthermore, we discussed it and have roughly outlined our goals for the rest of the semester. For the retrospective, it was hard to come up with ideas as we feel that our strengths from previous weeks have improved along with the things we have struggled with prior. Because of this it's hard to pinpoint how to improve the overall project process.

In our discussion we determined that the best thing that our group has going for us is our communication. This is a subject matter that our group has excelled at in weeks past and we continue to improve each and every week. This communication has led to a sense of comfortability with our project and teammates. Everyone seems to understand the overall process and we each work together to get our milestones done. This combined with our multiple weekly check-ups allow us to know exactly how the project is progressing.

There was a lack of discussion about what we have been struggling with as a group. This was not due to us not discussing it, we just couldn't come up with many areas in which we are currently struggling. The only thing we could identify is the fact that we haven't been testing as much as we possibly could. We also identified that it is hard to read through and understand others contributions. This suggests we should probably comment more frequently, especially since another group will be taking this project on next semester.

As for improvements we can make. Again, similar to the last section it was tough to brainstorm here because our project is currently operating rather smoothly. We decided if there was one thing we could improve on it's communication. Now communication is something that we said was going good for us, however, in any group project this is an area you can always improve. Some ways to improve communication is to meet up more frequently because the more time we set aside to talk the more time we will talk.
