Last Friday, our presentation was only able to show our progress to a limited degree. This is because last week was primarily polishing the front end and setting up the back end. Going into this week, Our goals are to finish the back end, to build a functional leaderboard demo and overall finish polishing our product. This is our last and final week building this project.

The best thing that our group has going for us this week is that it is nearing the end of the semester which means a lot of us are working overtime to get projects done. This productivity is likely going to help us in this class especially as this last sprint is a major part of our grade. If I were to put what I am trying to say into a word it would be "Tenacity". This week has us going all out in a lot of different projects which makes us want to work really hard right now.

The flip side of us being busy is that we are giving less of our overall time toward this project. This is because with multiple big projects there will obviously be less time proportionally for this class. Another struggle our team is currently having is a lack of communication. While communication has been a strength in weeks past, the end of last week and start of this week we have been having trouble establishing what we have to do to finalize this project. This is the worst time to have this happen as we are in the most critical stage of our process.

The most obvious way to improve the process is to have more consistent meetings to close this semester out. As of right now we are going to have a meeting Wednesday during the regular scheduled class period to discuss any last minute tasks that we need to complete. We will also be discussing how we are going to demo the project as well as when to meet this week to merge our individual progress. Even though communication has been our weakness this week, we have plans to communicate a lot to close the week out.
